We Will Design

We Will Design is a large experimental laboratory produced by BASE Milano.

Every year it welcomes and promotes projects by designers from all over the world, schools, universities, international institutions and young students.

At We Will Design practices and experiences of design become a tool to read – and sometimes solve – the many contradictions of our present.

We Will Design 2025 Making Kin*

“Genealogies are not only about tracing lines of descent; they are also about recognizing the interconnections, the friendships, and the alliances that we forge in the world.”

— Bayo Akomolafe, These Wilds Beyond Our Fences

Making Kin*

* The concept of "making kin" is strongly associated with the work of feminist scholar Donna Haraway, particularly in her essay "Staying with the Trouble: Making Kin in the Chthulucene" (2016). Haraway uses "kin" to rethink relationships beyond traditional family ties, advocating for new forms of connection and care between humans, non human and more than human.

In 2025, BASE will focus on making kinship, as an intentional and creative act, going beyond biological connections to build meaningful relationships among humans, non-humans and more than humans.

This exploration aims to rethink relationships from an ecological and intersectional perspective, to create new ways of coexistence and collaboration, where interdependence and alliance replace division and exclusion.

Laura Stachon — Walls that match my mood for Design Week 2025 we seek projects working on kinship with humans, non humans and more than humans.

Making kinships represents an invitation to rethink our ways of relating between generations and genders as well.

We want to explore the possibilities of alliances that are no longer based on familistic or speciesist ties, but on conscious choices, shared affinities, common interests and mutual sensitivities.

Next year theme emphasizes creating relationships based on mutual care, interdependence, and collaboration.

By rethinking traditional hierarchies and boundaries, design practices can encourage new ways of cohabitation and ecological responsibility, highlighting our interconnectedness with the broader world, including humans, non humans, and more than human
